the nineteenth century was a period of science and imagery when scientific theories and discoveries challenged longstanding boundaries between animal plant and human and when art and visual culture produced new notions about the place of the human in the natural world just as scientists relied on graphic representation to conceptualize their ideas artists moved seamlessly between scientific debate and creative expression to support or contradict popular scientific theories such as darwin s theory of evolution and sexual selection deliberately drawing on concepts in ways that allowed them to refute popular claims or disrupt conventional knowledges focusing on the close kinship between the arts and sciences during the victorian period the art historians contributing to this volume reveal the unique ways in which nineteenth century british and american visual culture participated in making science and in which science informed art at a crucial moment in the history of the development of the modern world together they explore topics in geology meteorology medicine anatomy evolution and zoology as well as a range of media from photography to oil painting they remind us that science and art are not tightly compartmentalized separate influences rather these are fields that share forms manifest as waves layers lines or geometries that invest in the idea of the evolution of form and that generate surprisingly kindred responses such as pain pleasure empathy and sympathy jonathan crary s techniques of the observer provides a dramatically new perspective on the visual culture of the nineteenth century reassessing problems of both visual modernism and social modernity this analysis of the historical formation of the observer is a compelling account of the prehistory of the society of the spectacle in techniques of the observer jonathan crary provides a dramatically new perspective on the visual culture of the nineteenth century reassessing problems of both visual modernism and social modernity inverting conventional approaches crary considers the problem of visibility not through the study of art works and images but by analyzing the historical construction of the observer he insists that the problems of vision are inseparable from the operation of social power and examines how beginning in the 1820s the observer became the site of new discourses and practices that situated vision within the body as a physiological event alongside the sudden appearance of physiological optics crary points out theories and models of subjective vision were developed that gave the observer a new autonomy and productivity while simultaneously allowing new forms of control and standardization of vision crary examines a range of diverse work in philosophy in the empirical sciences and in the elements of an emerging mass visual culture he discusses at length the significance of optical apparatuses such as the stereoscope and of precinematic devices detailing how they were the product of new physiological knowledge he also shows how these forms of mass culture usually labeled as realist were in fact based on abstract models of vision and he suggests that mimetic or perspectival notions of vision and representation were initially abandoned in the first half of the nineteenth century within a variety of powerful institutions and discourses well before the modernist painting of the 1870s and 1880s

the revolutionary boy at the barricades was memorably envisioned in eugène delacroix s painting liberty leading the people 1830 and victor hugo s novel les misérables 1862 over the course of the nineteenth century images of the paris urchin entered the collective social imaginary as cultural and psychic sites of memory whether in avant garde or more conventional visual culture visual and literary paradigms of the mythical gamin de paris were born of recurring political revolutions 1830 1832 1848 1871 and of masculine bourgeois identity constructions that responded to continuing struggles over visions and fantasies of nationhood with the destabilization of traditional patriarchal family models the diminishing of the father s symbolic role and the intensification of the brotherly urchin s psychosexual relationship with the allegorical motherland what had initially been socially marginal eventually became symbolically central in classed and gendered inventions and repeated re inventions of fraternity people and nation within a fundamentally split conception of the people the bohemian boy insurrectionary an embodiment of freedom was transformed by ongoing discourses of power and reform of victimization and agency into a capitalist entrepreneur schoolboy colonizer and budding military defender of the fatherland a contested figure of the city became a contradictory emblem of the nation the fight for racial equality in the nineteenth century played out not only in marches and political conventions but also in the print and visual culture created and disseminated throughout the united states by african americans advances in visual technologies daguerreotypes lithographs cartes de visite and steam printing presses enabled people to see and participate in social reform movements in new ways african american activists seized these opportunities and produced images that advanced campaigns for black rights in this book aston gonzalez charts the changing roles of african american visual artists as they helped build the world they envisioned understudied artists such as robert douglass jr patrick henry reason james presley ball and augustus washington produced images to persuade viewers of the necessity for racial equality black political leadership and freedom from slavery moreover these activist artists networks of transatlantic patronage and travels to europe the caribbean and africa reveal their extensive involvement in the most pressing concerns for black people in the atlantic world their work demonstrates how images became central to the ways that people developed ideas about race citizenship and politics during the nineteenth century during the nineteenth century gridding graphing and surveying proliferated as never before as nations and empires expanded into hitherto unknown territories though nominally geared toward justifying territorial claims and collecting scientific data expeditions also produced vast troves of visual and artistic material this book considers the explosion of expeditionary mapping and its links to visual culture across the americas arguing that acts of measurement are also aesthetic acts such visual interventions intersect with new technologies with sociopolitical power and conflict and with shifting public tastes and consumption practices several key questions shape this examination what kinds of nineteenth century visual practices and technologies of seeing do these materials engage how does scientific knowledge get translated into the visual and disseminated to the public what are the commonalities and distinctions in mapping strategies between north and south america how does the constitution of expeditionary lines reorder space and the natural landscape itself the volume represents the first transnational and hemispheric analysis of nineteenth century cartographic aesthetics and features the multi disciplinary perspective of historians geographers and art historians the book argues that images of the paris urchin addressed transformations at the heart of modernity including the decline of patriarchal monarchical social structures and the rise of industrial capitalism and colonialism it parses a contested national archetype that emerged from repeated recycled representations of revolutions 1830 1832 1 in this innovative volume literary critics and art historians explore the relationship between literature and the visual arts in 19th century france eighteen leading scholars including pierre bourdieu germaine greer segolene le men roger cardinal and mary ann caws analyse contemporary forms of representation to reveal the rich variety of factors that link image and text
